OFFICIAL RECORDS

Section 718.111(12) of the Condominium Act and Rules 61B-22.002, 61B-22.003(3), 61B-23.002(5) and 61B-23.0021(13) of the Florida Administrative Code provide guidelines for the maintenance and inspection of the association's official records. Florida law requires condominiums maintain the official records of the association within the state for at least 7 years. The records of the association shall be made available to a unit owner within 45 miles of the condominium property or within the county in which the condominium property is located. However, such distance requirement does not apply to an association governing a timeshare condominium. Please refer to the back of this information sheet for a list of records the condominium associations must maintain.

INSPECTION

An association's official records must be open for inspection by each association member or the association member's authorized representative at all reasonable times. The records must be made available within five working days after the board or its designee receives a written request. An association may comply with this requirement by maintaining a copy of the official records on the condominium association property and making them available for inspection or copying.

COPIES

In addition to the right to inspect the official records, unit owners have the right to make or obtain copies when they inspect the records. A reasonable fee may be charged for copies. A fee cannot be charged simply for the inspection of records. Reasonable rules regarding the frequency, time, location, notice and manner of record inspections and copying may be adopted by the association.

In order to ensure the availability of association documents to unit owners and prospective purchasers, associations must maintain an adequate number of copies of the declaration of condominium, articles of incorporation, bylaws, rules and all amendments to those documents. In addition a current "Frequently Asked Questions and Answers" sheet prepared as required by Section 718.111(12)(a), Florida Statutes must be available for distribution upon request. The association may charge the actual cost of preparing and furnishing copies of these particular documents.

DENIAL OF ACCESS

An association must make its books and records available to a unit owner or the unit owner's designated representative within five working days of the owner's written request. If an association fails to provide requested records within ten working days after receipt of a written request, the association is presumed to have willfully failed to comply with the law. The association's noncompliance entitles the unit owner to seek actual or minimum damages. Section 718.111(12)(c), Florida Statutes provides for minimum damages of $50 per calendar day, for up to ten days, beginning on the 11th working day after receipt of the written request. Such damages must be awarded by a court of law. A unit owner who prevails in court may also recover reasonable attorney's fees from the person in control of the records who knowingly denied access.

The failure of the board to allow inspection of books and records constitutes a dispute for which a unit owner may either file a complaint with the Division or petition the Division for mandatory nonbinding arbitration.

A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO REQUESTING BOOKS AND RECORDS

How does the typical owner go about requesting and accessing the books and records of the condominium association? Most associations have planned for and are ready to provide books and records to unit owners when they are requested for review. If your condominium association has established a set of rules and regulations addressing your right to inspect the books and records and the method required to access them, you should carefully read these regulations before making your request and follow them carefully. In spite of your careful adherence to procedure unforeseen problems may arise. It is always prudent to retain a record of your request in the event a misunderstanding or dispute arises at a later date as to whether or when your request was made. Always put your request in writing.

In order to establish at a later date that you actually made the request, you must be able to show that the appropriate parties actually received the request. There are two ways to accomplish this:

- 1) If you are on the property and you make your request directly to the management office put the request in writing and present it to the person in charge of the office. Make two original requests and ask the person who accepts the request to sign and date both letters at the bottom or in the margin. Leave one letter with the person who signed for it and take the other one with you for your files.
- 2) If you mail your request, mail it certified return receipt requested. Keep a copy of the letter and attach the return receipt to it for your files.

Be specific. Remember that most condominium associations are run like businesses. The management staff will need to understand in clear language what records you wish to review and whether you will want copies.

Specify the date and time you would like to conduct your review. The statute states that the association is required to make the books and records available at reasonable times. Reasonableness can be relative. For example, if the established hours for review end at 5:00 p.m. and you arrive at 4:00 p.m. to conduct a review that will take you past closing time, it may not be considered "reasonable" to expect office personnel to stay after working hours to accommodate you, unless that has been planned in advance. Rescheduling for the next day to complete the review may be the prudent thing to do.

Condominium managers and other office personnel are understandably cautious that records are only reviewed by those who are authorized. If you intend to have a relative, friend or business associate conduct a review for you, there are some basic measures that you may take to avoid misunderstandings:

- Notify the association in advance and in writing that your agent or representative will conduct the review.
- Clearly identify your agent or representative and state that he or she will present appropriate credentials upon arrival.

If you have done all of the above and still are not obtaining cooperation, you may file a complaint with the Division of Florida Condominiums, Timeshares, and Mobile Homes at 1940 North Monroe Street, Tallahassee, Florida 32399-1031. Again, be sure to include a clear explanation of your problem and copies of your documentation. The Division cannot enforce the provisions of Chapter 718, Florida Statutes unless it has evidence that a violation has occurred. The Division cannot provide legal representation for you. It does, however, have the authority to fine an association that has violated the statute, and it is authorized to order the association to provide access to the official records.

Another option, if you have not been permitted to review books and records to which you are entitled, would be to pursue mediation or mandatory, non-binding arbitration, as described in Section 718.1255 of the Condominium Act. The Division of Florida Condominiums, Timeshares, and Mobile Homes maintains several brochures and booklets describing what is involved in filing a request for mediation or arbitration. Generally, for disputes regarding access to official records you are required to file a petition for mandatory non-binding arbitration before the dispute will be heard by a court. After the arbitrator issues a final order, you, or the association, may appeal in court within 30 days.

In most cases unit owners will not encounter problems with their requests to view books and records. In those few cases when problems arise a clear knowledge of the applicable statutes and a methodical approach to the request will assist you in ensuring that your rights are observed.
